Who can I talk to about my insurance or work/school questions?

Q: Who can I talk to about my insurance or work/school questions?

A: Many people worry about paying for treatment and keeping up their work or schooling on dialysis. Every dialysis center has a social worker. Your social worker knows the most about insurance options, coverage, and places where you can find help.

Your social worker can help you get back to school or work by linking you up with resources. Your social worker can also stand up for you with your employer or school. If you need a letter from your doctor to keep working or for insurance, your social worker can help you get one.

What I can do when I have insurance or work/school questions:

- Talk with my social worker about my questions about paying for treatment, keeping my job, or going to school.
- Tell my doctor's office and dialysis center if my insurance changes.
- Let my doctor, nurse and social worker know if I need help to keep my job or stay in school.
